1) PROJECT INFORMATION

Field of expertise related to the topic:

CÚRAM's public engagement team and the centre's research staff regularly engage with educators, filmmakers and artists to develop innovative tools that engage their peers, public communities and policy makers in our research in developing next generation medical devices. We do this through three distinct residency programmes;

Science in film - representation of research in documentary format, working with filmmakers and filmmaking community on accurate, engaging 'scientific storytelling' to produce films that travel internationally to a wide range of audiences

Empowering the educators - providing teachers at both primary and secondary level with access to laboratories and researchers to facilitate collaboration in the development of educational resources
 Artists in residence - collaborative, creative projects inspired by CÚRAM's research and facilitated by CÚRAM that involve researchers, community partners and artists that produce artworks that reside permanently in the community.

Potential contribution to the project:

With a background in science communication, research, filmmaking, education and arts administration and curation the team have the potential to contribute expertise in the set up and management of creative science communication and public engagement programmes and the evaluation of their outputs.

Role in the project:

Research Dissemination Other

Short profile of the Organisation:

CÚRAM is a national centre funded through Science Foundation Ireland. While led by National University of Ireland Galway, CÚRAM's partner institutes include University College Dublin, University College Cork, Trinity College Dublin, University of Limerick, Royal College of Surgeons Ireland, Dublin City University, Athlone Institute of Technology, Clinical Research Development Ireland and National Institute Bioprocessing Research and Training. CÚRAM aims to create a sustainable future for the medtech sector in Ireland and train the next generation of world class medtech scientists and entrepreneurs. CÚRAM's Education and Public Engagement Programme 'Breaking Barriers' aims to inspire and engage the next generation of Irish scientists and engineers and to forge collaborations between our researchers and the community. The programme is based around three core residency programmes for Filmmakers, Artists and Teachers. Researchers also engage directly with the community through public lectures, film screenings, workshops and at national events.
